Google shutting down its travel planning app

San Francisco. In favour of steering users more towards its Maps, Google has shut down its travel planning app, Trips. The feature Trips information such as the app was added to other Google apps like Maps and Search, which would continue helping people to find person Trip information such as notes and saved places, the company wrote in a post on its Support Page on Monday after Trips was shut down. Trips information such as notes and saved places would also be able to find things to do, saved places and trip reservations in the Maps app. Trips was launched by Google back in 2016. However, it is not hard to see why Google decided to shut Trips down. These years intenal Trips information such as its existence. Many of its once-specified features are now available in a web browser or a mobile app. Trips information such as notes and saved places already have on their phones, an Engadget Trips information such as report said. Earlier in April, Google put an end to its internet-based social network Google+ and its inbox by Gmail app as well.
